Letter To Parents

From time to time you have been asked to assist the school system in its efforts to achieve certain goals for our students. You have always responded enthusiastically. As a result of your cooperation and support the Appomattox County School Board has been able to provide excellent educational opportunities for the youth of this county.

We are contacting you at this time to ask for your assistance and your support. We all need to give our attention to drug education. We need to understand the problem and to learn how the home, the school and other community agencies can work together to help our students develop personal habits which lead to desirable physical, mental and emotional health.

In order to focus attention on the problem and to become knowledgeable of how to provide the best guidance for our students, a county steering committee, directed by Mr. Roland Murphy, Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court Service, has scheduled a series of three meetings entitled, "Appomattox County Forum on Drug Education." The first session is scheduled on September 18, at 7:30 p.m. in the auditorium of Appomattox County High School. Mr. S. C. Delp of the Virginia State Police will be in charge of the program.

We feel that this is one of the most important public meetings which will be held in Appomattox County this year. In the interest of our youth, we encourage you to attend this meeting.

We shall look forward to seeing you on September 18 at Appomattox County High School.

Sincerely yours,
Lloyd G. Walton
Division Superintendent

GIVES TAX BREAK

Mays said persons seeking the exemptions should apply for it by May 1st, the deadline for filing property taxes.

W. R. Britton, Jr., Special Projects Secretary, talked with the Board on a possible grant for federal money to replace the county jail. The county has been under pressure from the State Department of Corrections to replace the jail. The Supervisors have been unsuccessful in efforts to get grant money for the project, estimated at $400,000 in 1976. However, Britton outlined a long process for determing eligibility for the grant.

Dr. S. R. Lawson, Board chairman, questioned the advisibility to continuing to pursue federal grants for the new jail.

"If the county had had the money in 1976 we could have built the jail by now," Lawson said. Britton and Lawson agreed that using a federal grant would add 25 percent to the cost of the jail.

The supervisors did not seem inclined to build a new jail with county tax dollars so the Special projects secretary was told to continue to watch for possible grant money.

Dr. Lawson read a letter of commendation from the State Emergency and Energy Service, commending W. R. Britton, Jr., who also serves as Emergency Services Coordinator for the county.

Dicky Hamilton and Ronald Coleman presented a folder explaining the possibilities of obtaining a franchise for cable TV in the county.

Coleman, stated a survey would be made to determine how many persons would be interested in cablevision in Appomattox County.

The Board of Supervisors would have to approve this and it was also stated Hamilton and Coleman will meet with the town officials on Monday night to seek their approval. Eight hundred persons would have to buy the service in order to warrent the cablevision.

The board read the file and plans were made to consider the cablevision and have a decision by the meeting on September 26. A map of the area the cable would cover was given to the Board members.

Drug Abuse Treatment

Each year almost 1 million people are treated for drug abuse problems in the United States, with results varying from permanent "cures" to total failure.

Drug treatment is generally offered in three categories: drug-free outpatient, methadone maintenance, and drug-free residential, usually called a "therapeutic community."

While different kinds of treatment attract different clients—heroin addicts often prefer to use methadone, and abusers of other drugs favor drug-free programs—studies have shown that all three methods are effective in reducing drug use and crime and increasing employment.

A recent survey of clients 4 years after treatment shows that while some drug abusers will rapidly change lifestyles after treatment, most change their lifestyles gradually after several treatment episodes. One study of more than 1,000 former heroin abusers 5 years after treatment found that, compared to pre-treatment activity, daily heroin use was down by 94 percent, criminal activity was down 70 percent, and employment was up by 14 percent.

THE PRESCRIPTION

Lesson for September 17, 1978

Background Scripture:
Acts 2:42-47;
Galatians 5:25 through 6:5;
Ephesians 6:10-18;
1 Peter 5:6-11.
Devotional Reading:
John 15:1-11.

Rev. Althouse

If I told you that I have in my possession a prescription that, if filled and taken, would guarantee a life of peace and power — assuming, of course, that you believed me — I am sure that you would be willing to pay a substantial sum of money for that prescription. Your assumption, very likely, would be that what you would receive for your money would be a bottle of pills, capsules, or some medicinal formula from your local pharmacist.

If, instead of receiving some kind of pharmaceutical product, however, you were to be given a piece of paper upon which was inscribed various passages of scripture — such as those listed above — you would probably feel you had been cheated. After all, we're a society that pops pills, not scriptures, to deal with our ills.

A Pill Or A Program?

A man suffering from a very serious disease came to a physician friend of mine, proclaiming, "I'll do anything to be cured of this condition!" The physician outlined a program of various practices and disciplines which would have substantially altered the patient's lifestyle. The program included only a minimal amount of medication. Although the prognosis without this program was "terminal," the man who had said he'd "do anything" refused the program that was proposed. He had been looking for a pill, not a program. He wanted to be healed, but he didn't want to have his life changed.

The Bible gives us many prescriptions for the kind of life all of us say we would "give anything" to have. Perhaps one reason we do not take them seriously is that they seem too simple, too commonplace. In 2 Kings 5 we find the fascinating story of Naaman the Syrian general whose career is threatened by leprosy. Journeying to Israel to seek healing from the Prophet Elisha, the great general is contemptuous of Elisha's command to "Go and wash in the Jordan seven times, and your flesh will be restored..." He is on the verge of going back to Syria when his servants come to him and reason: "My father, if the prophet had commanded you to do some great thing, would you not have done it? How much rather, then, when he says to you 'Wash, and be clean'?" (5:8-14).

They Devoted Themselves

So too, when the writer of Acts spells out the simple resources which made great the life of the apostolic Church — "they devoted themselves to the apostles' teaching and fellowship, to the breaking of bread and the prayers" (2:42) — we tend to dismiss them because they do not seem very unique or dramatic. Yet it was because of that simple prescription of the ordered life together that we read that "many wonders and signs were done through the apostles" (2:43).

The prescription for a life of spiritual power and growth is no secret and it is never beyond our means if we really want it.

THIS BRONZE FALCON, a coffin for the mummy of a sacred falcon, is Egyptian, Late Period, Dynasty XXVI. It is included in the exhibition, "Art and the Archeologist," aboard a Virginia Museum Artmobile.

"ART AND THE ARCHAEOLOGIST" - This exhibition received support by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Artmobile Here Thursday

"Art and Archaeologist," an exhibition that examines ancient art from the perspective of archaeological discoveries, will go on view here Thursday, September 14, at the downtown parking lot.

The exhibition, which is aboard a Virginia Museum Artmobile, is sponsored by the Arts Division of the Junior Woman's Club.

"It contains some 35 decorative, household and religious objects from ancient civilizations which grew up around the Mediterranean Sea, including Egypt, Minos, Mycenae, Mesopotamia and Greece.

The objects are arranged in archaeological chronology, according to William Rassmusen, the Virginia Museum's coordinator of education services, who assembled the exhibition.

"This is ancient art from the viewpoint of the archaeologist," Rasmussen explained. "Thus, although the Minoan civilization existed first, the Mycenean civilization was discovered first, and the exhibition is arranged is arranged in order of discovery.

"We hope to recapture some of the excitement of archaeological discovery and to help tie the ojects to a particular site. To connect the objects with the sites where they were discovered helps create a hgiehtened sense of reality of the ancient peoples who made them," he said.

The majority of objects in the exhbition come from ancient Egypt, Rasmussen noted. "Archaeology has enriched our understanding of Egypt enormously," he said. "We know perhaps more about life in Egypt of 1400 B.C. than in England of 1400 A.D."

The objects from Mediterranean civilizations range in time from a Minoan flower bowl of 2000 to 1500 B.C. and a Mycenean gold dish of 1500 B.C. to an Egyptian temple relief of 350 B.C.

Included in the exhibition in a special group of objects discovered only recently at Kingsmill on the James River, an early Colonial settlement in Virginia. The objects are on loan from the Virginia Research Center for Archaelogy in Williamsburg.

They include examples of wineglasses, metalwork and delftware, a type of pottery painted white with blue designs.

"These objects show that archaelogy is still at work and is being employed here in Virginia," Rasmussen said. "They being the exhibition very close to home and tell us about Colonial society in Virginia."

"Art and the Archaeologist" will remain on view here through Tuesday, September 19. The exhibition is open to the public at no charge on Thursday, Friday, Monday, Tuesday from 9 to 5. It is funded in part by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.
